1. Part A: ERD for Antonio Caruso online videogames retailer

This Entity Relationship Diagram shows the development model for an Online videogame retailer (Tahaghoghi and Williams, 2007). The Database presents 7 tables plus an extra automated calendar table automatically generated for the purpose of this project (Halstead,2012). Some relationships can be identified among the tables to understand the structure of the database at a first glance.

The first table called CustomerDetails has a 1 to 1 relationship with the orders table since each of the 30 recorded customers generated 1 order for a total of 30 Orders.

The Orders table shows a 1 to 1 relationship with the payments table since each order generated 1 payment associated with a unique Payment Id. As Every order registered contained more than 1 item, a 1 to Many relationships between Orders and OrderItems table is evident in the scheme. Since more than 1 item in some orders were returned generating a single Return associated with a unique ReturnId, A many to 1 relationship between the OrderItems and the Returns table is evident. In order to differentiate the various items purchased by customers in their orders, each item was associated with a unique StockId number belonging in the stocks, therefore the relationship between the OrderItems and Stocks table is 1 to 1. Finally, it is visible the 1 to Many relationships between the Stocks table and the Suppliers table as numerous of the same items in stock where provided by many suppliers in different quantities.

The trigger worked perfectly as showed in the test below for the existing StockId number 13 which presents 131 units stocked in the Stocks Table.

Output

StockLevel	StockId
131	13

To test it, a new row was added to the OrderItems table with 3 new quantities of StockId13 item sold.

```
●   INSERT INTO OrderItems (ItemId, OrderId, QuantitySold,Price,StockId)
    VALUES ('Pendubet13', 'Ord30', 3, 71.5, 13);
```

When Displaying the StockLevel from the Stocks table, it appears evident that the trigger worked as the quantity of StockId 13 Dropped by 3 units from 131 to 128

Output

```
SELECT StockLevel, StockId FROM Stocks WHERE StockId = 13;
```
